Abstract

This article deals with the allocation of rights and duties as the core of the future Constitution for Europe where there have been some important changes. The allocation of rights and duties will mainly be view in the light of the internal market which (as the “motor of integration”) has been the main subject to discrepancies between the Union and the Member States in the past.

This subject is of extraordinary importance during the ratification process of the treaty establishing a constitution for Europe since the Member States fear a loss of competences in relation to the Union.

This article discusses whether or not the allocation of rights and duties in the field of the internal market will be improved through the “European Constitution” and the sovereignty of the Member States will be protected better by the innovations.
